Fulbright Alum Teaches Science with 21st Century Tools

Trying to motivate young students to study biology can be a difficult task, but Fulbright alumnus Tom McFadden takes an innovative approach, incorporating videos, competitions, and even hip-hop music to help his students learn.

Tom was inspired to use these teaching methods while pursuing his masters in science communication at the University of Otago in New Zealand. He understood that the way to get students interested and involved in science is to make it more fun and interactive. For his thesis, he created the "Fossil Rock Anthem," a music video that parodies the popular song "Party Rock Anthem."

"My time in New Zealand changed the trajectory of my career," Tom says of his experience. "I tell people back home that I wound up getting a 'masters in science rapping,' which is a testament to the freedom and exploration I did during my Fulbright."

Tom was very active while on his Fulbright to New Zealand in 2011 and 2012. He toured the country, promoting a competition called New Zealand's Science Idol. He performed at 22 schools, in Auckland, Wellington, Christchurch and Dunedin, and reached approximately 4,000 students. It was hard work, but Tom enjoyed every minute of the experience.

"I still get emotional thinking about my tour, from students performing their school Waiata after one of my shows, to getting to rap about New Zealand's diversity over a ukulele band in the Parliament building! The grand Science Idol prizewinner – Covalent Love – is a chemistry music video hit that I continue to

"If you surround yourself with people who are smarter than you, there is no telling how far you will go." That is what Reiner Rohr, the Deputy Director of the German Fulbright Commission, told me and a small group of bright-eyed Fulbrighters upon our arrival in country. This just so happens to be some of the most important advice I have ever gotten, and it helped me utilize every single moment of my grant to the fullest.

My name is Jonathan Rabb and I was one of seven journalists awarded Fulbright's Beginning Professional Journalists grants to Germany for the 2012-2013 academic year. This grant was created in 1996 to allow a select group of promising U.S. journalists to come to Germany to conduct research, improve their craft, and complete residencies at German media and news outlets. For my particular grant, I did multiple residencies in digital audience development and transmedia, including one at UFA LAB, a one-of-a-kind digital creative lab owned by the oldest and largest production company in Germany. At UFA LAB, I worked on developing new formats for online television and did on-air coverage in both German and English for "eNtR berlin," a YouTube
